

Morse code communications requires less bandwidth and overcomes greater interference than other forms. CW users conserve bandwidth, which benefits all band users. Thus, cw-only band allocations are an appropriate reward for bandwidth conservation, but requires Morse code proficiency. In a major emergency, this form may be the only choice.